He is a registered Industrial Psychologist and focuses specifically on mentorship training and team effectiveness. Niël has been a regular speaker at local and International Conferences. He has published his book, "Raising Giant Killers" which has added great value to the world of mentoring.

Niël Steinmann's book "Raising giant killers" draws on the life of the lioness, the queen of the African bush, shares the wonderful analogy of the lioness and how she prepares for and raises her cubs in an extremely harsh and ruthless world. Her ability to make time, care for, nurture, protect, teach, expose, and eventually wean her cubs to become "giant killers" is truly remarkable. The survival and competence of her cubs represent success in the intriguing life-cycle of nature – ultimately their success ensures the future and sustainability of the pride. This powerful analogy of "Raising giant killers" not only offer significant points to ponder on mentorship but also an opportunity to explore and understand the fundamentals of mentoring in a growing relationship.
